Riddle ????

A famous hunter woke up early one morning and headed south to hunt bears after he finished eating his breakfast. After traveling a mile south he spotted a bear, aimed his gun, fired, and missed. The bear got scared and started traveling half of a mile. The hunter followed the bear and caught up with it after traveling half a mile. He shot the bear this time but only wounded it. The bear finally limped on towards east again and after another half of a mile the hunter finally shot and killed the beast. The hunter then walked the mile north back to his cabin and found it being ransacked by another bear.

What color was the bear tearing up the hunter's cabin?

Answer on the last page.

SOLUTION TO THE RIDDLE:

The bear that tore up the hunter's cabin must have been a white polar bear. The only way for the hunter to have travelled the way he travelled and wind up back at his starting point would be if he were at the North Pole.
